HIDDEN SPACES

HIDDEN SPACE

Architecture is always defined by external conditions.

Just as the white sheet of paper defines the edge of the drawing, so too the site, together with the plot of land and the regulations determine the possibilities of a form. The struggle between facts on the one hand and our fiction on the other are part of our work as an architect. It is within this conflict, that the project determines its innovative power and architectural quality.

This week we explored the relationship between form and space. While the outer form is precisely determined, its interior is free and left to our imagination. The spaces should however bear an architectural relationship to the form. This can be uniform or fragmented. Questions of the spatial structure, the light, the movement, the scale and the opening in relation to the form played a central role.

An everyday object (objet trouvé) chosen by the students determines the geometrical form, the spaces of which they designed into an abstract peep-box model and repeatedly examined through photography. A program has not been foreseen and they could determine the scale themselves.

At the end of the week, we exhibited the peep-box models and the everyday objects. On the one side the form, and the hidden spaces on the other.
